KNEELING.

Of all the [acents] [uncertain] of spring, none [2] [uncertain] more Smpressive than the souls t has a growing warmth and [punrent molstness,] [uncertain] like leaf mold in the forgat and cattails by the marshlands.

If you [garden—on] [uncertain] your knees, as you [must—then] [uncertain] you know this smell and the meaning of [soll] [uncertain] Itself, Tarn it over with your fingers a you [knuw] [uncertain] it [better—the] [uncertain] firm permanence of it, the molding and flocculating processes that build it, the rocks and Jangs, the sun and rain that went [nto] [uncertain] it tong before a plow or hoe ever scarred It. There it is, as it was for ages before [gpu] [uncertain] ye a bean seed, and as it will be for untold springs after you are gone.

The man on the land.senses this as he plows. Occasionally he stops and [looks—and] [uncertain] kneels, to" feel In the valley the elms are greening and at night he hears the [pecpers] [uncertain] in the woods and [looka] [uncertain] at new leaf life etched in the moonlight. These are the day of new [growth—growths] [uncertain] from s wondrous soil that takes the elements, [absarbes] [uncertain] them and at the precise time turns a seed to a flower, Kneeling, you feel the mystery but you cant fathom it. A bud, a leaf, a [bloom—they-] [uncertain] are deeper than understanding [itee] [uncertain] f.
