RICKENBACKER SAYS COMMERCIAL LINES CODDLED TOO MUCH

Washington, May 24.—Eddie V. Rickenbacker told senators Tuesday that commercial air transportation in this country is coddled too much, and that it is suffering from a lack of competition.

Rickenbacker, president of Eastern Air Lines, Inc., appeared before a Senate Commerce subcommittee that is trying to learn why commercial air lines are in poor financial condition during a period of peak prosperity.

"More regulation and more patronage are not the cure," Rickenbacker said in a lengthy blast at government subsidies, decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Board, and most of his competitors.

Rickenbacker testified that all mail subsidies—which rose to $45,000,000 last year—have made air transportation "immune to the grim necessities of sound business practices."

Of the $45,000,000 in subsidies last year, he claimed $24,000,000 as "reasonable compensation" and the "other $21,000,000 subsidy."

"Eastern Air Lines does not receive any of this subsidy and is not asking any," he said, adding that the subsidies had been used to develop uneconomic air transportation.
