TATTS' BIGGEST VICTORY

"Jumping" Joe Ferguson, state auditor of Ohio, and the Democratic candidate in the race for the United States senate in that state, was another devout disciple of the Fair Deal. He not only accepted it, he dived into it whole and he was directed to do by union labor. He ran such a dull and listless race, despite high administration and united organization labor backing, that Senator Taft won by the largest majority he had ever received.

The issue between the two contestants in Colorado was clear-cut on the Fair Deal. Representative John Carroll was the Sir Galahad of the Truman administration. He stood for everything that the Fair Deal advocated and Senator Eugene Milliken won without difficulty and was squarely on the opposite side of the same issues. Senator Milliken won without difficulty and held Mr. Carroll to a small margin even in the latter's own Democratic stronghold of Denver.

Out on the Pacific Coast in the state of California Mrs. Helen Gahagan Douglas was the Truman administration's plumed girl. She was a Fair Dealer even among Fair Dealers. She was given the support of every administration bigwig that could stage ager across the continent to come to her aid. President Truman volunteered praise of Mrs. Douglas at a press conference. Representative Richard M. Nixon disowned the Fair Deal in its entirety. The choice for the voters was clear and clean cut and they decided that they wanted Mr. Nixon in the senate and not Mrs. Douglas.

Norman W. Baxter.

"It's my time to put the motion bar for the house," said the chorus girl as she breezed onto the stage.

The man who is always growling must lead a dog's life.
