[Johnsons] [uncertain] carlist ambition was to get an education, but he was forced [to..quit-sehool_when-he—was-&-] [uncertain] years old and never had a chance to [onroll] [uncertain] again until he was 17. That nine-year lapse would have discouraged many folks, but it acted only as a spur to [Johnson—resulting] [uncertain] in his finishing grammar school and high school, obtaining his degree at Prairie View, and doing advanced work under the [lato] [uncertain] Dr. George Washington Carver at Tuskegee Institute.

Johnson was born in 1879 at Weldon, Texas, one of nine children of parents born in slavery. Orphaned when hews 8 and, in the third grade, he spent the next seven years with relatives and was so busy with farm chores that he could not attend school.

So Johnson ran away to live with an uncle who had promised to let him attend school and also give him a bale of cotton-and 50 bushels of corn for working barely escaped i injury.

The next day, he was given another job at 25 cents less, working on lumber stacks, but he accidentally hit a fellow [workeron] [uncertain] the head and was taken off the work. Next, he was assigned to loading lumber in boxcars at 75 cents a day. Eventually he became such an efficient loader that his boss, Carl Wallis, said, Wayne, you are too good a boy to wear out at a sawmill. What do you aim to be in life?"

A schoolteacher," said Johnson.

Well," Mr. [Wallis] [uncertain] said, if you promise me to go to school, [II] [uncertain] give you a suit of clothes."

And he did," Johnson happily relates. A brother gave me $5 for a [Christmas] [uncertain] present, and I bought books with it.
