Why Government Costs.

A government employee recently complained to his boss that he had nothing to do, that he was bored, and so was thinking of quitting. In reply, the boss asked him to be patient; in a little while, he'd get an assignment. The point was the boss supposed that he was being asked to wait for a raise, and with equal indignation, he offered one. In government, people get raises in proportion to the number they "supervise."

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS.

It's a safe bet that nothing since World War II, with the single exception of the Korean conflict, has so thoroughly rocked this country as the graft revelations. And according to reports on the contents of congressional mail from the folks back home, nothing has so shocked and revolted the people.

Democratic party chairman McKinney recently said that he is sure the scandals will not be an issue of the 1952 campaign, on the ground that the president and other Democrats are handling the situation, and will clean everything up neatly in short order. This, in the view of most observers, is whistling in the dark with vengeance. The graft has been going on too long, and too many people in key administrative jobs are directly or indirectly involved. On top of that, it was a junior Republican senator, William of Delaware, who charged open the tax frauds and has been to it that the investigation kept going. And it is an interesting fact that some Democrats who have done valiant work on behalf of high ethical standards in government—such as Senators Kefauver and Douglas—are persons non grata at the White House.
