WHY STOCK PRICES CHANGE

As the price of a stock goes up or down, it is not because of the price of the stock itself, but because of the price of the stock in relation to the price of the stock in the market. The price of a stock is determined by the supply and demand for the stock. If the supply of a stock is greater than the demand, the price of the stock will go down. If the demand for a stock is greater than the supply, the price of the stock will go up.

The answer is that a stock is much like any other piece of property. It is going down is simply the figure at which one group of people is willing to sell it and another group is willing to buy it. In a word, the price goes up and down in accordance with the sound old law of supply and demand. If demand is greater than supply, the price generally rises. If the reverse is true, the price generally declines.

A similar situation exists in the case of homes, land, crops and about everything else that is widely bought and sold. The price always represents a meeting of minds between the seller and the buyer. The price is determined by the supply and demand for the thing. If the supply is greater than the demand, the price goes down. If the demand is greater than the supply, the price goes up.

So there's nothing at all mysterious about the fluctuations in the price of a stock. They are natural, inevitable and desirable. And stocks do offer one advantage to the investor. They are a way of getting a piece of property. The price of a stock is always known. There's no guess work involved on either side. All any one has to do is telephone a broker and ask "What's the quotation is that day."

THE PRICE OF FOGHORN

In one of his Washington columns, Stephen Andrews of the Northern American Newspaper Alliance quoted a congressman as saying: "In the last commandments there are 297 words, but in an OPS order setting selling prices on manually operated foghorns are 12,962 words."

example of how the bureaucrats work, once they get a taste of power. The postage gets thicker and thicker. The orders become more and more voluminous—and, of course, more and more difficult to understand and follow. Some of the OPS orders, in fact, have been masterpieces of utter confusion. The people who make and sell foghorns undoubtedly spent more sleepless nights trying to get their teeth into OPS' 13,962 word order. And they aren't the only ones. It's a safe bet that there isn't a producer or a distributor in the country who hasn't gone around talking to himself after reading one or another of OPS' litany of orders. Some of them, indeed, proved to be totally unworkable, and OPS had to be called in to make amendments.

TRUMAN TEMPORIZES WITH CORRUPTION ISSUE

The first flash of enthusiasm which the Truman administration had for doing something about corruption in government appears to have faded with the passage of time. The trumpeting over two weeks ago to herald immediate drastic action on the part of the chief executive has died down. It has almost seemed that the president and his close advisers were not interested in anything more than an internal house cleaning in which their own friends handled the mess and the public was left to wonder what the president was giving up. The idea of appointing special prosecutors, with subpoena powers and a grand jury to ferret out politicians and racketeers in government, has been dropped. The idea of appointing special prosecutors, with subpoena powers and a grand jury to ferret out politicians and racketeers in government, has been dropped.

It has been reported that Judge Thomas F. Murphy was offered and declined the task of examining governmental honesty. It has also been said that Mr. Truman found it impossible to get a Republican of sufficient stature to do the job according to White House specifications. It has been reported that Judge Thomas F. Murphy was offered and declined the task of examining governmental honesty. It has also been said that Mr. Truman found it impossible to get a Republican of sufficient stature to do the job according to White House specifications.

It might be apparent to Mr. Truman by now, through the reluctance of those he has approached, that the mess must be pretty bad and that the mess must be pretty bad and that the mess must be pretty bad. It might be apparent to Mr. Truman by now, through the reluctance of those he has approached, that the mess must be pretty bad and that the mess must be pretty bad and that the mess must be pretty bad.

Undoubtedly one of the handicaps under which Mr. Truman is laboring is that the men who are giving him the most trouble are the men who are giving him the most trouble. An Easier Way.

A pick-pocket in New York City picked a man's pocket and got 11 cents. Arrested, he pleaded guilty. The amount was too small to fight the case. He would have liked a five percent or a 10 percent to have got the money from the government's loan agency and had the matter closed on payment.

Jim Henry was appointed chief deputy and later by J. L. Hazlett, the man who was arrested for his illicit pocket picking.

The president of a concern which manufactures pulp and paper products, and which, like thousands of other enterprises, is dependent on good railroad service for its existence, recently discussed some of the problems the rails now face. In the course of his talk, he said: "In spite of the fact that the rails are still true, the statement made twenty years ago by Calvin Coolidge is still true. He stated then that 'the railroad was the backbone of American transportation.'"
