HONESTY

He must have an honesty that is basic, and thoroughgoing; that will not compromise. His honesty will not weaken, he will not ultimately depart.

That kind of honesty seems especially necessary nowadays, when we are constantly faced with the nauseating spectacle of corruption and crookedness eating away the dignity and moral fiber of our government. It takes courage not to give in to the feeling that these things are inevitable, that there is no fighting them, that sort of thing. We must fight it if we are to prevail. We must all fight it; we must always fight it; wherever we find it, wherever we see it, no matter who it is guilty.

The courage to believe in what is right, and to act on our belief, even though it may not seem to be the expedient thing to do at the moment—there is a vital quality. It is in with honesty, then, and in with courage, it is tied in with responsibility. If you build this sort of thing into yourself, then you have a code with which you do not compromise.

This suggests a final thought: Naturally you are thinking about building careers—about building success. But think, rather, about building yourself. Build yourself out of your experience as you go through life—learn from it, draw from it, use it to enrich yourself. Yes, make yourself rich with that inner wealth that is ours if we will only reach out for it and take it. Build yourself, each of you, into a well-rounded, broad-gauged man.

As you mature, do not let the weaknesses of others—or your own weaknesses—interfere with your inner range goal. Choose that goal so that, when you attain it, it will not leave you feeling let down, disappointed. Try your hopes and ambitions to real things—to achievements and ambitions that will be truly and genuinely satisfying to yourself, whether they make you wealthy or not. Aim to be successful, not only in your business, but in LIFE. Keep in the broad point of view; look for the big picture, not just the details. Remember your human duty to your fellow man, and to those who

A GREAT REPUBLIC CAN DIE

By Eugene L. Garay

A great republic can die, at the moment of its supreme strength and power, once a decline in public morality has set in and there is a weakening of official integrity and departure from the basic concepts of freedom. It is historically axiomatic that no great nation has ever been defeated until it has become so corrupt that it could not stand against an enemy from outside or from within. In twenty short years, our republic has multiplied its corruption. It is a cancer that is eating at our sense of right, at our morality.

This moral corruption of our body politic made great strides under the New Deal. It has flourished under the corrupt, greedy and unscrupulous Fair Deal, and it is sometimes called "the New Deal" because it is so new, under the Socialist Labor government. So it is not the forerunner of Communism.

This moral corruption has penetrated deeply into the life of our nation. Private and public morals have been debased and become corrupt or non-existent. Influence is placed daily upon the nation block and offered for sale to the highest bidder. "Know-how" does not run as much as in Washington these days as "know-when." Every basic concept upon which our government was founded and under which our people have prospered has been contemptuously flouted and brazenly violated with impunity.

Those who create and will privilege, who mark off special classes and special interests, who destroy our system of government, our basic way of life.

The "know-how" technique has become the order of the day and is used against all those courageous enough to oppose them by the motley gang of political racketeers, labor bosses and left wingers presently in possession of the government. Lamentable, pitiable, shocking, but we have learned the lesson: we must learn to live with the corruption of our own government.

He became our moral enemy. We fear corruption from it as well as from those who exploit it. We fear it wherever we find it, wherever we see it, no matter who it is guilty.

The courage to believe in what is right, and to act on our belief, even though it may not seem to be the expedient thing to do at the moment—there is a vital quality. It is in with honesty, then, and in with courage, it is tied in with responsibility. If you build this sort of thing into yourself, then you have a code with which you do not compromise.

THE FLY MENACE

DEMANDS CONTROL

Amesbury, Texas, July 21.—The control of the fly menace comes at the top of the list of necessary public health measures which should be applied by every city, community, and individual in the state, declared Dr. Gen. W. C. Hale, state health officer.

The most effective measure for fly control is to prevent their breeding. Flies breed in filth and about eight days are required to complete a life cycle. During her life time of several months, one fly lays from 500 to 1,000 eggs.

To eliminate flies, the breeding places must be destroyed. Manure piles, garbage and other organic filth furnish the requirements of warmth, moisture and food necessary for the propagation of the fly. Flies should be kept from contact with food or drink on grounds in which such food and drink are prepared and served. Likewise, they should be kept from access to open receptacles where they pick up the infection, which they later spread to humans by contact with the food and drink, and by unwashed hands.
