HOW DO YOUR FROZEN FOODS SCORE?

How do the foods you prepare for your home freezer score? Probably high with your family when they eat and very high with the daily meals.

If you're entering any of your frozen food products in the State Fair this fall, you'll have a chance to learn how to score them. The food and nutrition specialists for the Agricultural Extension Service of Texas A. & M. College have a score card for this purpose.

First, how practical is the selection of the food? Does it supplement the family food supply whether it is fresh, frozen, canned or prepared in some other way? The specialists say the second part of the method of preparation. Were the vegetables properly selected before they were quick frozen? Are the fruits still bright because they were treated to prevent discoloration? Were the chickens properly bled? Are the baked products of good quality? Then the scores consider the pack. Is there an airtight seal on the container? Is it filled adequately? Is the package labeled? Is there an outside protective covering such as moisture proof cellophane container. The fourth item on the score card has to do with the quality of the food. Does it taste natural? Is the color bright? Has there been any

TASTE AND TELL

Chili is a favorite dish for many families in this country. A nourishing, tasty food that can serve as a main dish for an important meal, or an item of delicacy for special treats, chili has as many different recipes as there are people who cook.

Louise Mason, foods and nutrition specialist for the Agricultural Extension Service of Texas A. & M. College, says people's taste for chili differs as much as their methods of cooking. "Taste and tell," she suggests for becoming a good chili taster. Develop your own method for scoring.

The specialist suggests for nutritive value in chili, the use of one-third meat, one-fourth as much pork or beef. If you prepare your meat at home, chop or grind it coarsely. "You don't want your chili made of finely ground hamburger, so use meat in chunky size pieces," she advises.

For a highly seasoned chili use freshly ground pepper pulp and onion seed for characteristic flavor. Onions and garlic are essential, but beans are optional. Grate a little cheese on top of each serving, and be sure no grease is floating around.

The specialist suggests for a supper with chili as the main dish, try a tossed green salad, sour pickles, tortillas or crackers, and coffee. If you have dessert, make it fresh fruit or peaches.

If you are interested in running a supply of chili, ask your county home demonstration agent for directions.

SCANDALOUS YEARS

By Fletcher Knebel and Jack Wilson
Washington's political scandals, breeding on friendships, favoritism and fraud, have made shocking news, and have been forgotten. The record shows those as years of immorality, corruption—the shameful era of Pendergast.

President Truman: My people are honorable—all of them. But Political morality in Washington has sunk to the lowest depth in a quarter of a century. Four members of the White House staff have been implicated in under cover deals since April, 1945. Two friends of the White House have been convicted of fraud, a third indicted.

Fourteen high federal officials have been exposed as golden rule thieves. The third floor of the Davy Crockett Hotel was opened. Jim Chandler and Mrs. W. P. Calvert were married Tuesday afternoon by Justice of the Peace E. M. Callier. Miss Beale Walker was queen of the Houston County Fair. Mrs. J. W. Heston was first in the parade. Toole, Lively, Ben Rains and J. L. Taylor won prizes in the old fashioned contest at the fair.

EDITOR BLAMED FOR THINGS THAT DO NOT HAPPEN

No, we are sorry, but the Courier editor did not make that spider on page 1 appear last week. The spider got on the unprinted paper of its own accord, and without an invitation or the knowledge even of the editor. The spider got unintentionally caught between the unprinted paper and the press cylinder, and thus set his life trying to read the Courier before it was printed. But the Courier editor will take the blame, as he has always taken the blame for such things, although he was not even feeding the press that day. Now our serious forget something, and we are going to do a little joking. He forgot to blame us for that spider web, afterward found in a dark corner. Our justice had overlooked that spider web, and we didn't even know it was there. But you say that we should have known it, and rather than argue about it, we will take the blame.

FINEST AUTUMN WEATHER YOU EVER SAW

The Courier editor thinks this is about the prettiest fall he ever saw; lots prettier than those the girls gave him when they threw him down, since which he is always looking for something disappointing. He is predicting a hard winter, based on information given him by his friend, Mr. Mildew, who says that the squirrels are growing longer hair, rabbits learning to jump higher and the cows already lowering for their supper of cotton seed meal. He predicts an early and hard winter in the air, based on the fine, fall weather we are having; that every tree has its thorn, and that it can't all be good—must be a mixture of the bad with the good.
