HOUSTON COUNTY
COTTON FARMERS IN MEETING

Monday night in the district cotton room in Crockett, Houston county cotton farmers turned out 125 in number to discuss a mutual cotton production problem.

Directors in the Houston County Farm Bureau, realizing the problem confronting cotton farmers, called a meeting in hopes of standardizing prices to be paid for cotton picking and to discuss available labor.

In Farm Bureau's President Frank Cress's opening remarks, he stated Houston county cotton farmers had never approached cotton harvest season in an organized way. Each year in the past, the same type cut-throat competition prevailed among producers, resulting in all farmers relating prices two or three times during the season.

It was also pointed out that with existing economic conditions, if the only trend occurs this year, the only people who would profit would be the harvest laborer.

William Wedemeyer, field representative with the Texas Farm Bureau, very ably illustrated the above with a breakdown of the cost of cotton production and the expected prices that will be paid for cotton.

He also showed a triangular illustration with labor, industry and agriculture on the different sides in their battle for survival.

Lester Workman, Texas Employment Commission from Lufkin, briefly discussed the services they rendered on their labor problem. He stated they keep an up-to-date record of the number of pickers needed in the various counties, cotton yield, prices being paid, etc. They also keep current list of migratory labor. Mr. Workman announced that Bill Parker, Crockett, will again work for the commission, and he is the one to take your local problems to it. It was pointed out that the Texas Employment Commission does not enter into, or try to influence, prices paid laborer.

Dave Tiller, county agent, briefly discussed the free Smith County Cotton Clearing service, and told of its purpose and the benefits that can be derived.

Cotton farmers at the meeting unanimously agreed to stick together on prices paid for first picking at $1.50 per hundred for picking, and $1.00 per hundred for pulling. Producers arrived at these figures after good participation in group discussion on the matter.

Farmers present voted to have another meeting in two weeks to discuss the matter again and to determine if changes are to be made after several days' trial.
